Complaints continue about the bad smells from the flour mills in the Port

Society / Buenos Aires, 5th Electoral Section / 0223 - Mar del Plata / 4 people

Residents of Punta Mogotes warn that despite the closure of the Moliendas del Sur company, the situation in the area has not changed. They have requested the intervention of the Ombudsman's Office.

A group of Punta Mogotes residents met this Thursday with Public Defenders Fernando Rizzi, Fernando Cuesta, and Walter Rodriguez to discuss the problem of the nauseating odors emanating from the port's flour mills, which are polluting the air in that area of Mar del Plata.

During the meeting, which took place at the headquarters of the neighborhood's Development Society at Lebensohn 2250, residents called for the intervention of the Ombudsman's Office because—as they mentioned—despite the fact that the Moliendas del Sur flour mill was identified as the main cause of the odors, the plant's closure did not change the situation in the area.

Rizzi explained to 0223 that the Ombudsman's Office has already been working on this issue, which is why they visited the offices of the Sanitary Works Department a few days ago. There, they confirmed the authorities' compliance with the notices they are issuing to the companies. "We are going to coordinate a meeting with the head of the Port Consortium, Jorge Hidalgo, so he can explain this situation to us," the official stated.

The meeting also addressed issues related to street repairs and the problems with the horses in the plaza.

which are used for riding and normally travel on the neighborhood's sidewalks and streets.

“The issue of insecurity couldn't be left out . It's a constant issue in every corner of the General Pueyrredon district. People are already discouraged and afraid. There's also fear about the issue of squatting,” Walter Rodríguez said.
