- This landing follows the one on Friday, when 500 tons of dead fish arrived from Aysén.
- The mass mortality event caused by harmful algal blooms in both southern regions has generated 5,282 tons of organic waste.

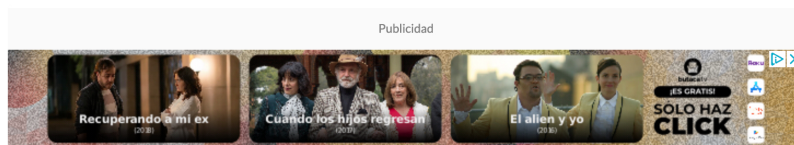

The dead fish will be processed into fishmeal.

A new discharge of dead salmon was recorded in the port of Talcahuano, which come from the Aysén Region as a result of the massive mortality affecting these fish and which could be linked to the decrease in oxygen in the water and the bloom of harmful algae (HAB).

This is about 578 tons of salmon that landed on the last day at the port of San Vicente, which are added to another 500 tons that arrived on Friday to the city of Penquista.

They were then transported by land to the Landes fishing plant on Rocuant Island in Talcahuano, where this waste will be transformed into fishmeal and fish oil.

It is worth noting that the residents of Talcahuano filed a protection appeal before the Court of Appeals of Concepción to prevent the continued arrival of these dead fish, due to the possibility of contamination of the bay and causing ecological damage.

According to the latest data from the National Fisheries and Aquaculture Service (Sernapesca) regarding the status of the mass mortality contingency of salmonids due to harmful algal blooms (HAB) in the Los Lagos and Aysén regions, to date an approximate number of 5,282 tons of mortality has been verified in both regions, equivalent to 3.4% of the total active biomass in the affected areas.
