Evil from Dobroflot? Sailor was left disabled, not wanting to interrupt his fishing

Anatoly Serdyuk / AIF

Vladivostok, July 9 - AIF-Primorye.

The sailor was left disabled because the ship's owners refused to stop fishing and take him to doctors, Mash reports.

The guy worked on a ship belonging to a company that is part of Dobroflot. During a voyage in the Far East, a part of the worn-out ship fell off and flew straight at the sailor. Boshko's finger was torn off, but they did not take him ashore so as not to stop the fishing.

While he was in shock, his superiors forced him to sign papers about his guilt. He only found himself on shore 10 days later - with hellish pain, pus and infection. It was too late, and part of his arm had to be amputated. The sailor received 50 thousand in insurance, no one apologized to him. The guy managed to open a case and is now trying to draw attention to his terrible story.

On the walls of the houses at Russkaya 84 and 86 you can now see images of a guy looking at the Tokarevsky lighthouse and a girl admiring the sun against the backdrop of a cable-stayed bridge. Artist Sergei Motofanov said that the creation process took about two weeks: first, they removed the old coating, then prepared the walls for painting and applied facade and spray paint.
