Earlier this year, Kaliningrad resident Viktor Boshko went on a voyage on a vessel of a large Far Eastern company to the Sea of Okhotsk. They caught fish, periodically unloading the catch on a floating base, where the fish was processed, frozen and loaded into the hold. And then, during another trawl, Viktor's left hand was severely pinned by a cable, and his finger was torn off. And, as it turned out, this was only the beginning of his troubles. Circumstances developed in such a way that the 30-year-old guy ended up having his hand amputated. Komsomolskaya Pravda tried to understand this terrible story.

- We unloaded at the floating base, moved away and half an hour later began setting up the trawl, - Viktor Boshko tells Komsomolskaya Pravda. - And then the trawl went into the water, we unhooked everything and the last one was the pull-out cable. I pull out the cable, I hear a crash from behind. It turns out that the trawl iron board weighing 1.5 tons came off the stopper. Another second and my hand was pressed to the slipway railing by the cable. And then my hand was pulled in, chewed up now under the elbow... Everything was torn: blood, an open wound, the bone was visible. They freed me, quickly bandaged me up and gave me an injection.

And then what? It is clear that with such a serious injury you need to see a doctor immediately. It would probably be logical to go full steam to the shore, to the hospital. Or call the rescuers. Moreover, according to our hero, the nearest port of Magadan was less than a day's sail away.

However, the ship decides to go not to the port, but to a floating base in the middle of the sea.

- The order from the top management was to go to the floating base "Zaliv Vostok". We walked to the floating base for about 40 minutes. There a doctor met me, put me on the table, stitched me up, stopped the bleeding. They said that now we would go to Vladivostok. Then the doctor saw that a trawler was approaching us and loading fish. I asked: "Why?" The answer: "Orders from above. They said that we finish off the fish to the end, and then take the person." And so for five days we finished off the fish, continued loading, - continues Viktor. - Only when the hold was filled with frozen fish, we went to the port.

But not to Magadan, but to Nakhodka, which is much further away.

"It turns out that a fish is more expensive than a person," sighs Bosko.

"Say thank you for staying alive"

All these five days Victor lay in the ward and suffered from pain.

- I was lying down, the doctor came and said: "You'll be fine. Everything will heal quickly, you'll keep your arm." He consulted with the head doctor of our company, called him, saying: "Everything is fine, your arm is whole, only your finger was torn off." I really did lose my thumb, - says Victor.

*Due to the loss of precious time, Victor's left arm had to be amputated.

After five days of continued fishing, the floating base with the Kaliningrader on board finally moved to the shore. There were still five days on the way. In total, 10 days have passed since the emergency.

- Already on the way, somewhere on the eighth day, my temperature rose to 38 degrees. And it was jumping: now it was there, now it wasn't. I don't know what the doctor was saying upstairs, but he kept saying to me: "Everything is fine." But I was getting worse and worse. There was also pain from the start, I couldn't sleep. I felt that something was wrong. We arrived in Nakhodka at 2 a.m. on January 24. Only after lunch they towed me to the shore. They said that an agent would meet me. No one met me! I somehow got through the checkpoint, and the me. No one met me: I somehow got through the checkpoint, and the security didn't want to let me out. There was an ambulance at the gate. They processed me and took me to the hospital.

According to Victor, the wounded hand was already smelling of decomposition. However, on Saturday and Sunday he was only given injections. And they also gave him the phone number of the company's chief physician.

- I talked to him, he told me in a rude way, something like: "Tell him thank you that you survived and that your arm is still intact. In that case, they will amputate your arm right on the ship, but we left it for you. Be happy. And don't call here anymore," says Viktor, specifying that he only had an X-ray after the weekend, and the first operation was on January 29, that is, on the 15th day after the incident.

Doctors performed several operations, but were unable to save the arm.

- I survived 5 anesthetics and 4 surgeries. Before the fourth one, I already felt and understood that there would be an amputation. And from my condition, it was clear that they would cut it off. Intoxication set in, I couldn't eat, I felt sick. Here the choice was between life and death, - says Victor.

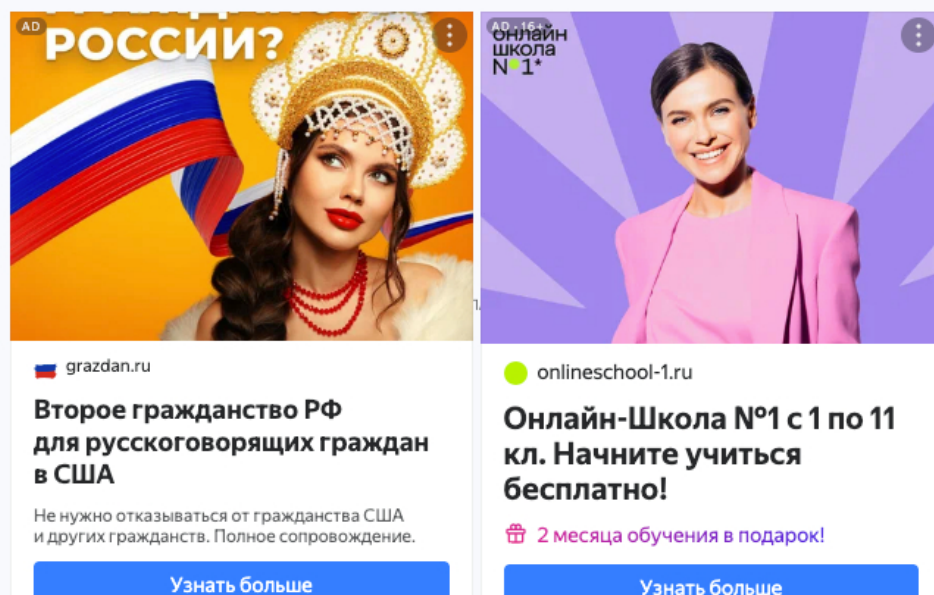

He thanks the doctors of the Nakhodka City Hospital for both the treatment and the care. He says that he had the worst thoughts then. And the question was: will he die or live.

After the amputation, the body began to recover, and our fellow countryman was transferred to the surgical ward.

- And during the rounds one surgeon said: "If you had been brought here earlier, I would have saved your arm." Of course. And I sat on a ship for 10 days and rotted! In theory, they should have called a helicopter right away, or taken me to Magadan on a ship, where everything happened. The doctors asked later: "Why didn't you take me? Magadan is nearby, the same specialists. They would have saved your arm." I ask myself these questions.

Case against "unidentified persons"

Boshko contacted the police. On May 20, a criminal case was opened.

- With great difficulty, a criminal case was opened under the article "Abandonment of a person in danger by unidentified persons". It's good that it was opened at all! Because there were refusals "due to the lack of corpus delicti". When all this happened, there was no employee from the labor inspectorate. There were only company employees and a person from the social security. I wrote a complaint to the labor inspectorate of Vladivostok, but 4 months have passed and there is no answer, - says Vanda, the sailor's wife.

The investigation is being conducted in the Far East, and it seems that they are not in a particular hurry. According to Viktor, two investigators have already been replaced on the case

Investigators have already been replaced on the case.

- I called the investigator, but he was on a business trip. It turns out that he was replaced and now there is some third investigator, whom we can't even get through to. He himself hasn't contacted us, - says Viktor. - And "unidentified persons" figure in the case because they made it look like no one was guilty. Well, there is no guilty party and that's it! I can't say why. They are probably covering for us.

The insurance compensation was transferred to the sailor's card - about 80 thousand rubles. But will this money restore health?

Now Victor is in Kaliningrad, trying to get used to a new difficult life. His arm still hurts, his nerves are shooting. But the hardest thing is psychologically. He needs to keep his spirits up and somehow feed his family. Victor's wife works as an accountant, she has two children from her first marriage. She says that she and Victor were planning to have a child together, they were making plans...

- I can't work - that's what's hard, - sighs Victor. - And I can't sit around doing nothing. Longing comes into my life, and I don't want to let it in. Now I'm running around to doctors, finding out about a prosthesis. And then I need to recover, find a job, and somehow live on.
