Toxic effluents: Dobroflot scandal smells like war between utilities and recycling companies

SOCIETY ECONOMY PRIMORYE

After a wide public response, the fish processing plant, with which the residents of Bolshoy Kamen and the regional authorities associate the smell of not very fresh fish that has covered the city, has suspended its work. However, almost immediately, some speakers who appeared like a jack-in-the-box again launched a polemic on the topic of who is more to blame for the smell - the Dobroflot fish cannery or the treatment facilities in the city itself. Incidentally, it was from this angle that the smelly issue was already raised by the fugitive mayor Rustyam Abushayev - back in March, he convened a meeting on the problem of the smell with representatives of Dobroflot and Vodokanal.

However, the April reincarnation of the search for the guilty party was laughed at by city residents - that they would not distinguish the smell of rotten fish from sewage. But everything turned out to be even more interesting: now utility workers claim that sewage pumping stations fail not just like that, but with the participation of toxic waste from Dobroflot. DEITA.RU looked into the details.

New sewage stations were installed in Bolshoy Kamen just 3 years ago. And within a year, some of them were out of order. Guess which ones?

The water utility put into circulation photographs and inspection reports confirming the failure of the equipment servicing the Dobroflot wastewater, while the rest were intact.

As stated in the act on the failure of the pumping station equipment from July 2021, the ventilation equipment installed at the Bolshoy Kamen priority development area in pumping station 9, pumping station 10 and Sadovaya pumping station "failed due to the oxidation of local conductors, which indicates the high toxicity of the effluents."

As representatives of Vodokanal told DEITA.RU, Dobroflot's treatment facilities do not comply with departmental standards.

"According to departmental norms and rules for the creation of coastal production enterprises of the fish industry, industrial wastewater from fish processing plants must be pre-treated at on-site treatment facilities before being released into the city sewerage

Two innovations will be introduced for all Russians with a mobile phone system or fed directly to city treatment facilities. Dobroflot's treatment facilities are designed for ordinary household sewage. Accordingly, at our sewage stations we receive very dirty runoff, which puts the equipment out of order. We had to spend 3.5 million rubles to replace the equipment during the year of their operation," the company said.

When equipment fails, pumping stations are shut down and overflow occurs, as was the case a couple of days ago at pumping station 9. It is quite possible that this is the kind of overflow that the "defenders" of Dobroflot could smell, trying to pass it off as "that very stench."

According to utility workers, if the situation with the drain does not change, the equipment will finally become unusable.

The planned wear period of the equipment is at least 6-8 years. Where there are no enterprise discharges, the equipment is in a completely normal condition, there is no corrosion and stoppages of pumping stations.

"For example, at KNS 6. (Sixth microdistrict) there is no Dobroflot discharge, and the equipment there complies with technical specifications. At the sixth station, there is no excess of maximum permissible concentrations. At three KNS with the enterprise discharge, there is a 10-fold excess in all indicators of all substances that cause chemical corrosion," Vodokanal stated.

The goal of the controversy that has unfolded in the information field is clear, but the residents of Bolshoy Kamen cannot be fooled. This is how they reacted to the version of the Dobroflot defenders;

"A custom-made thing. Like the locals are stupid and can't tell the difference between the smell of sh.. and rotten fish? Seriously???"

"It's a great idea to blame everything on Vodokanal. But here's the problem. Why does the smell only disappear when Dobroflot is not working?"

"The story with the water utility is also not simple, two years ago they said that Dobroflot was pouring waste into the city network without preliminary cleaning and was breaking their equipment at the pumping station, that no pumping station could withstand that. But yes, where is the pumping station, and where is the smell of fish."

"What sewer?! It smelled so bad of rotten fish that it made my eyes water. In the summer it's just awful! In Michurino, the whole sea is often covered with film with pieces of processed fish"
