Share:

Turkey is playing it "black and white" and claiming that the Coast Guard vessel harassed Turkish fishing boats at Farmakonisi and not the opposite, that a Turkish coast guard harassed the Greek vessel, as the Corps announced earlier today (5.1.2023).

More specifically, as stated in the announcement from the Coast Guard Administration of the Ministry of Interior of Turkey regarding the incident at Farmakonisi, the fishing boats flying the Turkish flag and located off the coast of Cape Tekağaç in the Didim district of Aydın were harassed by the Greek Coast Guard vessel at 12:02 noon.

"The Greek coast guard team in the area was removed by our coast guard vessel, which was immediately sent to the scene, and the Turkish fishing vessels ensured the safe continuation of their hunting activity," the Turkish coast guard said.

They also claim that the warning shots from the Greek Coast Guard "fell" during the removal of the vessel from the area, while the Turkish Coast Guard "responded in the same way."

The Greek Coast Guard vessel was moved away from the Coast Guard vessel assigned to the incident and the Turkish fishing vessels were thus able to continue their fishing activities. When the Greek Coast Guard vessel opened fire in the air as it was moving away from the area, the Turkish Coast Guard vessel also fired in the air and responded in kind.

The Turkish Coast Guard Command continues to fulfill its duty to protect our rights and interests in the blue seas of our homeland, within Turkish maritime jurisdiction on a 24-hour basis."

The incident reported by the Greek Coast Guard

The Greek Coast Guard announced today that a patrol boat that was carrying out an ordered service to identify three Turkish fishing vessels in the sea area southeast of the island of Farmakonisi, within Greek territorial waters, was harassed by a Turkish coast guard vessel.

According to the Coast Guard, the Turkish coast guard vessel performed dangerous maneuvers with the aim of ramming the Coast Guard vessel. The crew of the Coast Guard vessel fired warning shots in a safe area and the Turkish coast guard vessel departed the scene, heading east towards the Turkish coast.
